Sl.No	Assignment Questions
1.	Identify several of the important skills that help managers succeed. Give an example of each. How might the importance of different skills vary by level and area within an organization?
2.	Many people are attracted to the status, power, and financial rewards associated with being a manager. However, the lifestyle of managers can be stressful, with a high workload and an unrelenting sense of obligation and responsibility to the people being managed. For example, one U.S. study showed that senior managers work long hours and enjoy an average of only 12.2 vacation days per year. What do you think are some of the pros and cons of becoming a manager? Is this a profession and a lifestyle that appeals to you? Explain.
3.	Some critics claim that corporate HR departments have outlived their usefulness and are not there to help employees, but to keep the organization from legal problems. What do you think? What benefits are there to having a formal HRM process? What drawbacks?
4.	In a typical mid-sized or large organization, the three recognized types of management related communication are: Downward Organizational Communication, Upward Organizational Communication, Lateral Organizational Communication. How has each of these patterns of communication been affected by Information Technology/Systems? Explain.
5.	Explain the correlation between management and change theory, introduction to working in healthcare environments and care coordination to the concept of leadership and management. Analyze conditions in which the professional nurse utilizes and experiences leadership resulting in management and change theory.
